ACTIVITY OVERVIEW

APHIAplus Nuru ya Bonde improves the lives of mothers, children and their families in Kenya's Rift Valley region. The project focuses on delivery of quality health services related to HIV/AIDS, family planning, reproductive health, malaria and tuberculosis. APHIAplus Nuru ya Bonde leads interventions to strengthen HIV counseling and testing, prevent mother-to-child transmission of HIV, increase family planning and reproductive health resources, and improve maternal and child health. It also works to build the capacity of local partners to implement quality assurance and coordination of monitoring and evaluation.

ACTIVITY AREAS

APHIAplus Nuru Ya Bonde project works with the government and community-based organizations to:

Ensure access to quality health services and products

AIDS, Population and Health Integrated Assistance Nuru Ya Bonde, builds the capacity of health care providers to deliver high-quality health services. Specifically, the activity helps people living with HIV/AIDS gain access to counseling and treatment, and reduces child deaths through improved maternal and newborn child health services at health facilities.

Improve the well-being of the poor and marginalized groups

At the community level, the activity strengthens water, sanitation and hygiene programs and improves food security and economic well-being for households caring for orphans and vulnerable children. The activity supports orphaned and vulnerable children with education, life-skills training and ways of generating income to support them-selves.

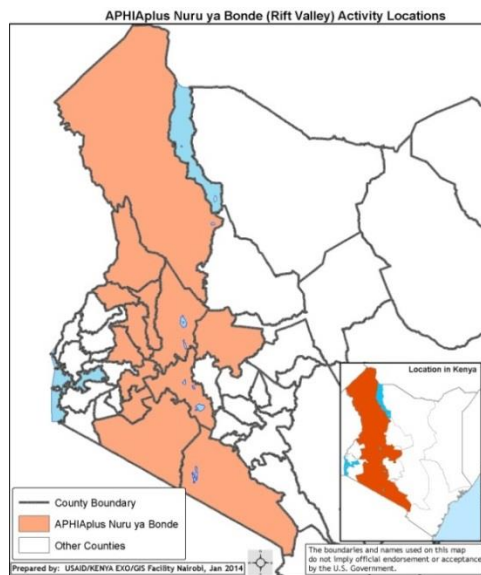

Build capacity of local implementing partners

In collaboration with the USAID-supported Fanikisha project, AIDS, Population and Health Integrated Assistance, Nuru ya Bonde trains local implementing partners on project management and performance monitoring. Regular feedback meetings are held with all implementing partners to review approaches to improve health-service delivery and communication services as well as data analysis, outcome reporting and documentation.

ACTIVITY IMPACT

Christine Chelagat found out that she was HIV positive 11 years ago as she was recovering from the loss of her husband. “At that time when you tested HIV positive, it was like being handed a death sentence,” she said, “there was no information but hurtful statements directed to anyone thought to be HIV positive.”

Initially, she gave up hope and decided to stay home waiting for her death. Everything changed when she and others in her community formed the Muitai and Care Support group, a savings and lending plan. Christine and her group members obtained information about this type of economic empowerment through APHIAplus Nuru ya Bonde.

Christine Chelagat is HIV positive and is one of the beneficiaries of the APHIAplus Nuru ya Bonde activity that supports orphans and vulnerable children together with their caregivers

With money from the savings and lending plan, Christine started a poultry keeping project and started selling eggs and chickens. She also planted a variety of crops on her small piece of land. These activities have enabled her to provide for her family and also pay college fees for her two eldest children. She is grateful for the support and skills that she gained. Today, she reflects on her life journey and looks to the future with renewed hope.
